

FREDERICK LOUIS CASS

The beautiful month of May, 1907, records the birth of our friend at his home in North River. The event caused great family exultation, and a bright future was prophesied for him who came to them at such a hopeful season.

Fred was a precocious youth and matriculated to Prince of Wales College at the age of fourteen. After a year spent at that institution he taught school. But after three years of teaching he deserted pedagogy to enter St. Dunstan's, in the fall of '27.

In his college career Fred has won the respect and affection of Faculty and students. Concentrated study during study periods permitted him to partake actively in the various lines of student activity. He was Business Manager of Red and White during the past year to which magazine he also made many contributions. He was also on the executive of S. D. U. A. A. A. An athlete of no mean ability Fred has regularly competed favorably with our outstanding athletes in the annual Field Day sports. Finally, our senior fifteen loses in Fred an aggressive forward, which position he has filled for the past three seasons.

Now we bid you a fond farewell, Fred, and may all success attend your future life. We feel confident that you will always be as distinguished among the Alumni of St. Dunstan's as you were within the walls of your Alma Mater.—A.O.M., '32.

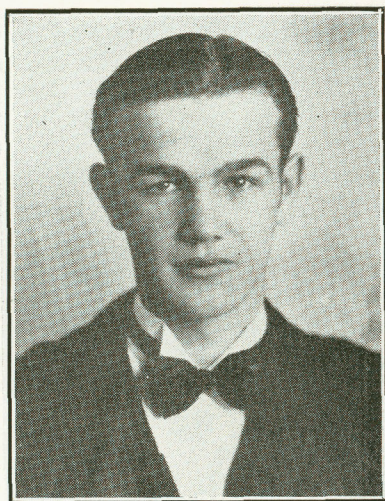

HAROLD JAMES CROKEN

It was at the close of the first decade of the twentieth century, during that season of incipient decay, when nature had begun to shed her summer cloak of green to don the sombre garb of winter, that Harold began his earthly career in the favored district of Freetown.

Harold's early education was obtained at his district school, where he evinced an aptitude for learning. In the fall of '25 he entered St. Dunstan's. During his years at college, his pleasant smile and ready wit have gained for him many friends and companions. Not only is he a favorite with his own classmates, but with the other students as well. In his studies and all other undertakings he adhered to the motto: "Omnia vincit labor," and, as a result, his assiduity has made for him a record, which will always be a credit to himself and his Alma Mater. Athletics also claimed part of his attention. He participated in all the branches of sport and excelled on the gridiron. He was a member of the senior football team for three years, and his many bursts of speed, and quick thinking often saved the day.

Harold will soon be going forth to join the ranks of our Alumni. We naturally expect great and noble things from him, and no doubt his versatile genius will win for him many laurels. We wish him unbounded success in whatever may be his career in life.—J.H.L., '32.

ALFRED P. DOUCETTE

"He is a presence to be felt and known."

Towards the close of the peaceful and sunny month of August, 1909, the goddess of Fortune smiled on a quiet home in Charlottetown and escorted into the speedy twentieth century another member of the class of '31, Alfred Doucette.

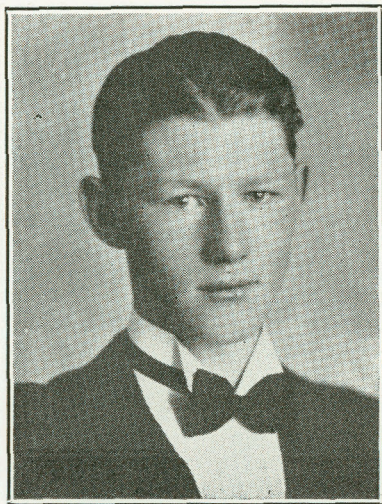

Having completed his early education in Queen Square School the desire for still better training led him to Prince of Wales College and finally to St. Dunstan's in the Winter of '28. His cheerful smile and pleasant disposition immediately led all to seek his friendship. His aptitude for mathematics and the languages led the Faculty to appoint him to the dignified post of associate professor of Mathematics and French, which position he has filled with that effectiveness which has ever marked his efforts.

Not only in his studies has "Alfie" been proficient but also in athletics. He has been an athlete of no small repute. For the past two years he has been a member of the first teams in football, baseball, basketball and hockey.

As a musician "Alfie" will be greatly missed among the boys of S. D. U. His piano playing cheered many an evening and his singing was certainly a great source of entertainment at social gatherings during his short course at St. Dunstan's.

Concerning his future we are not in a position to say anything but if we may judge from his success at S. D. U. we may safely say he can fill any position he chooses.

—A.E.L., '31

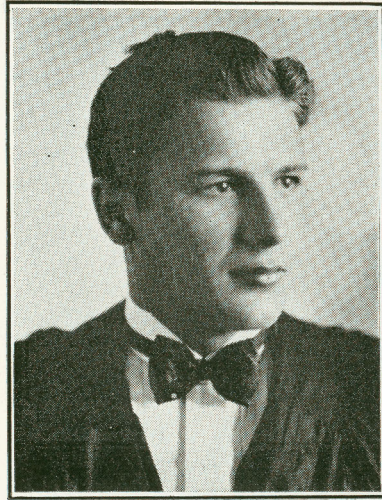

PHILIP ERNEST DOYLE

To Georgetown goes the distinction of being the birthplace of the youngest member of the graduating class of '31. Philip was born on November 26, 1911, and attended Georgetown School, where he showed more than ordinary ability, as is evidenced by the fact that he passed the matriculation examinations at the age of fourteen. His thirst for knowledge being unabated he entered St. Dunstan's in the fall of '26 and while here he has distinguished himself as a student, always standing high in his class as well as passing the B. L. examinations and winning the coveted Philosophy medal in 1930.

As a fitting recognition of his ability as a writer he has been entrusted with the editorship of the athletic department of the Red and White for two years. He has also for the past year performed the onerous duties of Secretary for the S. D. U. A. A. A.

In athletics all branches of sport claimed his attention. For three seasons he was a valuable asset to the senior fifteen. On the diamond he is recognized as a star, having played with the first baseball team for four years. Hockey, tennis, and handball also received a due share of his time.

Phil has been a cheerful companion and a true friend to those who were privileged to know him well. As we bid him adieu our parting wish is that the same success which was his at S. D. U. will crown his efforts in whatever walk of life he may choose to tread.—J.G.M., '31.

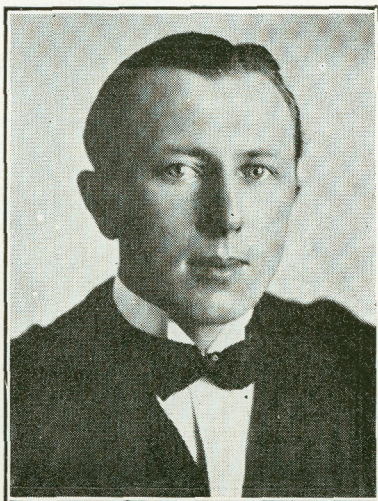

ADRIAN MICHAEL DUMAIS

Adrian, the only French Canadian in this year's graduating class, was born May 24th, 1910, in the little village of St. Joseph de Lepage, Que. He acquired his rudimentary education at the convent in his native village, and later attended the Little Seminary of Rimouski, where he was educated in Letters, and where he successfully passed the B. L. examinations. However, to complete his education through the study of Philosophy and Mathematics, and most especially to extend his command over the English language, he entered St. Dunstan's two years ago.

Since his coming to S. D. U. he has not only proven himself a clever and diligent student, but also a jovial and amiable comrade to all who have sought his companionship. He never seemed to tire poring over musty books; and upon visiting his room, one was sure to find him lost to the world about him in some deep treatise in Philosophy. Although he is naturally quiet and unassuming he is not so reserved that one would be tempted to say that he is shy or bashful. His kind and sympathetic disposition has won for him many friends among the student body. Although Adrian devoted much time to his books, he also found time to play his part as an athlete. Tennis is his favourite game.

He now goes forth from his Alma Mater to study jurisprudence, attended with the best wishes of all his college mates for a long and successful career in his chosen profession.—D.I.C., '32.

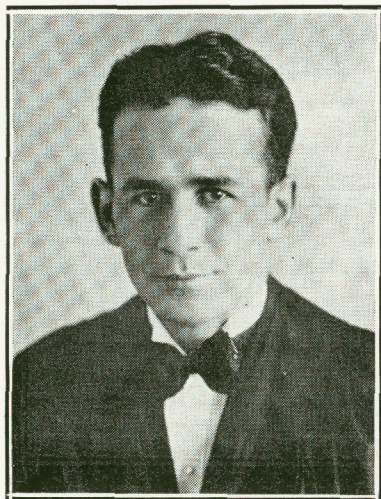

MARK GERALD GREENAN

In the fall of 1925 a shy and pensive lad, a native of Brae, entered St. Dunstan's as a first year student. His bashfulness was soon overcome, however, and his aptitude for witty remarks soon made him a general favourite. Mark is of a quiet unassuming nature and does not become intimate with everyone whom he chances to meet, but with the eye of a competent judge of character, carefully selects his friends to whom he will remain loyal in all trials and circumstances.

During his six year sojourn at S. D. U. he has endeared himself to his professors as well as to his fellow-students. He applied himself diligently to his studies; and as a reward for his assiduity, he today graduates from St. Dunstan's with a mind well equipped with the basic truths of letters and science. In athletics also, he has taken an active part. For the past two years his inexhaustible strength and skilful tactics were a valuable asset to second team football squad, and often made ruinous onslaughts on the opposing fifteen.

With regard to his future Mark is silent, but in consideration of his sterling character and unparalleled judgment, we feel confident that success awaits him, and that he will ever acquit himself in a manner creditable to his Alma Mater. As a parting word we wish him unlimited success in whatever career he may embrace.—D.I.C., '32

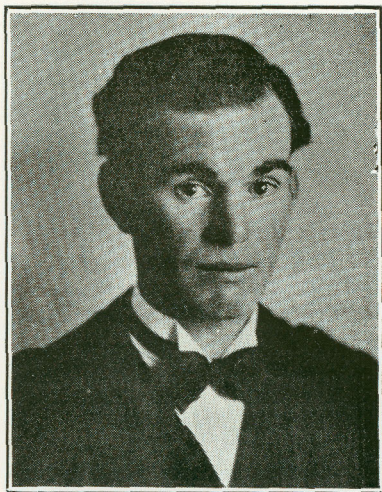

ARTHUR JOSEPH HUGHES

To write a biography is, in the present case, as much beyond my power as it is foreign to my purpose. If in these few lines I can embody the spirit of true regard which actuates them my task will be well accomplished.

Arthur was born in Charlottetown, and there spent his youth. Having completed his primary education in Queen Square School he entered St. Dunstan's University. Here he pursued diligently his duties as a student. In the class-room he acquitted himself very creditably, displaying a marked liking for literature. But textbooks did not absorb all his interests. Arthur was a firm supporter of athletics, and has played first team hockey for the past four years.

Not for a moment losing sight of his ideal of a true education, he strove to preserve an even balance in his college course, with the result that Arthur departs from St. Dunstan's this year admirably fitted to obtain the best from life.

Nature in an indulgent mood bestowed on Arthur singular gifts, which he wisely developed. Possessed of a keen intellect and a comprehensive grasp of social and political affairs, acquired from judicious reading, he is also a conversationalist and platform speaker par excellence. To these Arthur adds a pleasing personality, and withal a spirit of quiet confidence, which will go far to surmount any obstacles which he may encounter on his road beyond St. Dunstan's.—E.M., '31.

ARTHUR E. LAWLOR

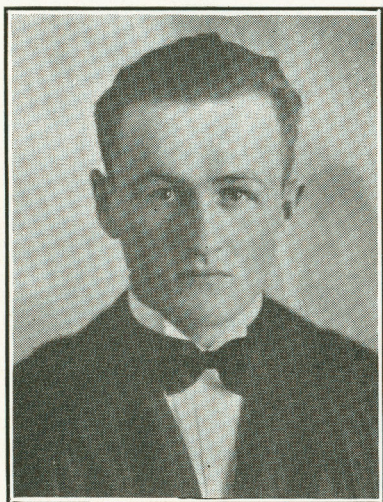

"He knew himself to sing, and built the lofty rhyme."

After a number of years of earnest labor another man has reached the goal which he set out to gain. Born in Boston in the year 1908, Art for a short time attended school there, at St. Joseph's. The family, I suppose, not contented with life in the big city, migrated to our little province and settled in Granville, where, at Granville School, our class-mate laid the foundation for his future college career. He then came to St. Dunstan's, where he spent the best part of six years, and where he endeared himself not only to his class-mates, but also to every student with whom he came in contact.

Art's outstanding achievements were in literary circles, and many poems, essays, short stories, etc. stand as monuments to his genius. Red and White, our college magazine, is greatly indebted to him for his many works. This year he had charge of the Jungle Department, which office he filled very satisfactorily.

In regard to athletics, Art was never a bright light; he never broke any records, but he entered into every branch of sport, thus making his life an ideal one, one in which study, zeal and general goodfellowship were the wholesome ingredients of a very wholesome mixture.

As to his future Art has been quite reticent, but in farewell we bid him the sincerest good wishes for success in all his endeavours.—A.P.D., '31.

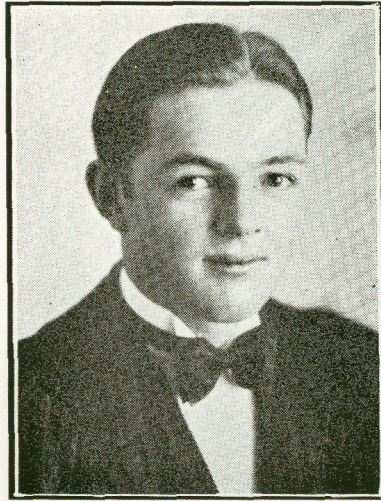

JOHN GEORGE McCORMAC

"He of the eastern dome whose weighty sense Flows in fit words and heavenly eloquence."

George is a character of whom much could be written, but, brevity being required, an adequate picture of him may be given in the words "a keen mind, a curt tongue, and a kindly heart."

George entered St. Dunstan's from St. George's High School some five years ago, and during his college career has made a good scholastic record, as well as taken an active part in other college activities. In sport his energies are mainly devoted to football, and last fall, as a front-liner of the senior fifteen he gave a splendid account of himself. His forte, however, is oratory which he has demonstrated many times in debate, to the delight of his audience, and the discomfiture of his opponents. In recognition of his superiority in this line he was this year chosen as president of the senior debating society. A favorite with all the students as a result of his keen wit and unfailing good humor, his popularity with his classmates is attested by the fact of his being appointed president of the class of '31.

In conclusion, we venture to predict that George's absence from St. Dunstan's will be felt by all, but most keenly by those who were most intimate with him, and to whom he has ever shown himself to be a true gentleman and a loyal and worthy friend.—D. MacI., '32.

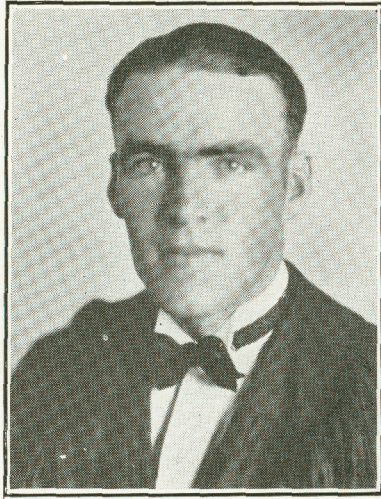

CYRIL JOSEPH MacDONALD

Another prominent member of this year's class is Cyril Joseph MacDonald. Cyril hails from that picturesque and prosperous little village, St. Peters, on which the sun shone so brightly on the morning of September 26, 1909. This brightness, we are told, was due to the fact that on that September day, it was rumoured about the village that the Dr. was blessed with a new son; we find this son to be none other than our Cyril.

This name appeared on the register at St. Dunstan's on September 8, 1925, and on that day, Cyril began his college course which has since been crowned with success. On the completion of Second Arts, he was successful in passing the B. L. examinations. He has, for two years, capably performed his duties as assistant business manager of Red and White. The rhetorical genius coupled with sound philosophy which he has displayed on many occasions in our debates proclaim his thorough training and bespeak him a promising future. Maybe these factors together with his pleasing appearance are responsible for his popularity with the fair sex.

Cyril took part in every game. In handball, baseball, football, and hockey his weight and mettle were always keenly felt. He was hockey representative during the past year, and also captain of the senior team.

In bidding adieu to our friend and fellow student, we wish him every success; and we feel confident that, to whatever field of endeavour his efforts will be directed, the success which awaits him is such as is due a full fledged graduate of St. Dunstan's.—J. MacL., '32.

ELESBAN A. MacPHEE

"He adorned whatever subject he either spoke or wrote upon."

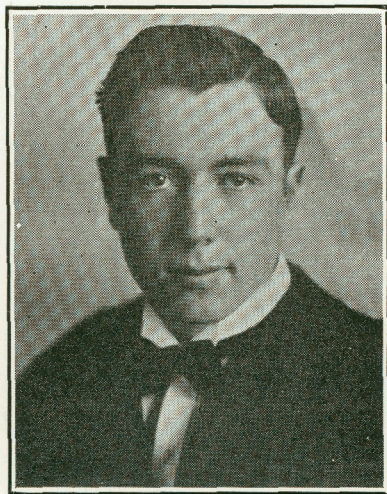

It is with a certain amount of trepidation that we attempt a biography of our friend "Gus," for the very wealth of material makes us hesitate through the difficulty of choice.

A native of Selkirk, "Gus," taught school there for two years and entered St. Dunstan's in 1927. During his four year stay here he has created for himself an enviable record, for his splendid popularity combined with his brilliant scholastic success, makes him an outstanding student. His literary record is excellent, for having been Alumni essayist of 1929, and always a frequent contributor to Red and White, his work is crowned by his being chosen as valedictorian of the class of '31. Also, in recognition of his enthusiastic support of athletics he was elected president of the Athletic Association for the present year.

Among students "Gus" is universally admired, and he is a friend of all, but it is only those few, who have been privileged to know him intimately, who can really appreciate the depth and worth of his character. Whatever he does, he does thoroughly, working earnestly, and playing in the true spirit of the game.

In "Gus" we find a brilliant conversationalist, a witty and amusing companion, and a true and loyal friend, hence it is with sincere regret that we witness his final departure from our midst, and we sincerely hope that his customary success may attend him on his way.

—D. MacI., '32

ALFRED JOSEPH MURRAY

"To know, to esteem, to love and then to part Makes up life's tale to many a feeling heart."

Close contact with a man leads to a true valuation of his character. Thus we find it with Alfred Murray: Knowing him better means a fuller appreciation of his true worth.

Alf was born at his present home among the picturesque hills of Tyrone, October 3, 1910, where he spent his early life. Studious by nature our young friend at an early age acquired his primary education and passed the matriculation examinations, thereby qualifying himself to enter grade eleven of St. Dunstan's University course in the fall of '26.

A quiet, ingenuous but unassuming youth was Alf always, so that it took time for his student comrades to pierce the veil of his reserve and to discover behind it a man of noble characteristics. Kind, truthful, and gentlemanly, we find him always.

A retrospective glance at Alf's career as a student reveals that his endeavours were confined more to studies than to sport. In his class he was always outstanding. Failure to him was unknown. He was a logical and artful debater and our college magazine, Red and White, has recorded on its pages many praiseworthy contributions from his pen. It is worthy of note that he was for two years a member of its staff, acting this year in the capacity of assistant-editor-in-chief.

We now give you a fond farewell, Alf, and as your future is unknown we can but sincerely wish that every success may crown your efforts.—F.L.C., '31.
