There was a young lady in Lynn
Who was so excessively thin
That when she essayed
To sip lemonade
She slipped through the straw and fell in.

The waiter untipped for the drink
Tossed the residue into the sink ;
The lady came down
In a straw-coloured gown
And tipped him a nod and a wink.

(Next !)

For many days our table end
Has very quiet been,
For this is Lent and we've resolved
To quit the ways of sin
And all is peace and pleasantness
As once it was before
Ere Finol came to steal away
The goods of Senator.

Smile and the world smiles with you,
Laugh and the world will roar,
Howl and the world will leave you,

And never come back any more;
 For all of us can't be handsome
 Nor all of us wear fine clothes,
 But a smile is not expensive
 And covers a world of woes.

In olden times the poets wrote
 Of little Jackey Horner ;
 He's moved, for now he gets his plum
 Way out at Webster's corner.

When this wide world seems down and out
 And business on the bum,
 A two cent grin and a lifted chin
 Helps some, my boy, helps some.

—MARY—

Mary had a little lamb,
 He was her steady beau,
 As Mary spent where'er she went
 She fleeced the lamb you know.

Oh those New Year resolutions !
 Likewise the ones for Lent !
 The father swears he will not spend
 On drink a single cent.
 And Sam who broke his meerchaum
 And vowed he'd smoke no more,
 Now puffs a half cent cigarette
 Behind the study door

The following paragraph is taken from an Act of Parliament of the reign of Charles II :—

“ All women of whatever age, rank, profession, or degree, whether maids or widows, that shall from and after the passing of this act impose upon and betray into matrimony, any of his majesty's male subjects by perfumes, paints, cosmetics, washes, artificial teeth, false hair, spanish wool, iron stays, hoops, or high-heeled shoes, shall incur the penalty of the laws now in force against witchcraft, sorcery and such like misdemeanors, upon conviction.
