

If one of us could take their place for even a short time, we might be better able to appreciate the fears they entertain for life in this new environment. But even if life is not all sunshine for them, they will soon discover that the boys are deeply interested in their success. (It is rumored that some of them have experienced that solicitude already.)

With the hope of getting the most out of college life they knew that they must become an integral part of college life in all its phases and cheerfully became identified with most of the extra-class activities. Where they cannot participate, as in football, etc., they are seen on the sidelines displaying a keen interest in the sport and shouting a team to victory.

We find them on executives, and glancing through this magazine you will find that they are really in there fighting.

With such a start they will surely make their presence felt more and more as time goes on. And we feel that their influence will be a beneficial factor in college life.

COLLEGE CHRONICLE

For the past six years, the war years, the Chronicle Editor of Red and White chronicled items of interest concerning students and former students. Very often this was bad news. Deaths had to be recorded, deaths caused by one of the grimmest struggles history has ever known. Many St. Dunstan's men fought in this struggle, yes, many gave up their lives in it. Such news Red and White was forced to bring its readers. The Chronicle Editor this year has a much more pleasant task. He writes of the events of students from whom the shadow of war has been removed, and over whom lies a feeling of peace and quiet. Red and White joins with the rest of the world in thanking God for this long-awaited peace, and prays Him that all her children may justly experience all the blessings and joys of the post-war world.

Realizing that education is one of the surest roads to peaceful living, students have flocked to St. Dunstan's from all parts of the country, so that St. Dunstan's finds herself this year with the largest enrollment in her history. Each of the Maritime provinces is represented among the students with a goodly number of French Canadians from Quebec. There are also some representatives from Maine and Massachusetts.

Many service men have returned to pursue their peaceful studies. To them Red and White extends a welcome, and prays that their stay at college may be a profitable and a peaceful one.

This year a considerable number of co-eds have invaded the campus. Eighteen of the Island's brightest young ladies have enrolled at St. Dunstan's. They are fitting into college life neatly, and we feel assured that they will benefit from their sojourn here, and that St. Dunstan's will soon have many worthy daughters. Much of the credit for the presence on the campus of these young ladies is due Rev. J. P. E. O'Hanley, Ph.D., who was mainly instrumental in the establishment of the Sedes Sapientiae Scholarships for girls.

Dr. Croteau has taken on a full-time job with the Island Credit Union. Rev. Howard Wight, who was assistant in the High School last year, is now assistant to the Vicar-General of the Diocese at Summerside. Rev. Edmund Roche, has taken charge of mathematics in High School. Messrs. Frank O'Connor, '41, and Cletus Murphy '45, are also assisting in the High School.

The St. Dunstan's unit of the C. O. T. C. is again functioning with Major (Rev.) G. A. MacDonald as Officer Commanding. There is a much decreased enlistment, however, because of the fact that this training is optional for members of Junior and Senior Years. It is compulsory, however, for Freshmen and Sophomores.

Cadets are once again under the command of Lieut. (Rev.) F. L. Cass. Frank Kelly is Major of the Corps.

Public Speaking is again organized on a compulsory class basis. Much interest is being shown in this study this year. An effort is being made to have St. Dunstan's represented in the Maritime Intercollegiate Debating Society.

Intercollegiate athletic competition, which was banned during the war, has returned to the Maritime colleges. St. Dunstan's is represented in this competition, and is making a very creditable showing, even though her student body is much smaller than those of other colleges. As this is being written St. Dunstan's Senior Football Team is engaged in the New Brunswick-P. E. I. finals with U.N.B. Red and White wishes all St. Dunstan's teams every success.
