Courage

Not all the brave wear battle dress
To fight in sky, on land and sea;
And stripes or wings are seldom things
That prove how brave a man may be.

Courage is greater than all rank,
And seeks no higher place nor power,
Does not betray in any day,
And does not fail the crucial hour.

Valor may flame though life itself
Be burdened with disease and pain;
And man may bear old scars and dare
The combat of the soul again.

Who is not swayed by tongue or pen
To unbelief and pagan ways,
Who does not fear the skeptic's sneer
However difficult his days;

Who yields, when yield he must, his dreams,
To fight alone where no flags wave,
Unpraised, oppressed, he stands the test,
And surely, surely he is brave.
