

THE JUNGLE

President Ostrich.

Vice-President Fadder.

Secretary Spike.

Committee Duke and Stork.

By a meeting of the Anthropophagi Association, the Jungle staff of last year was unanimously given dis-honourable discharge for squandering the Jungle funds in extensive research expeditions. The genealogy of the Jungle, however, has been brought to light. After indefatigable research work by Professor DeLirious, head of the Paleontological Society of Chepody, along with his brother fossils, it has been found that the Jungle originated in the deep denizens of the African wilds, where it was the traditional custom of two rival monkey factions, of the species Cercopithecus callitrichus and Crysothrix Sciureus, to esconce themselves in the interlacing branches of the banyan trees, where they carried on a lively debate, hurling epithets and cocoanuts at each other. It appears that these wordy and weighty conflicts took place at certain definite seasons and astute research showed that the tendency to debate was due to the praying of a Platyhelminthian parasite on the members of the two factions. A number of prospectors, it seems, entered this jungle during the season of these debates, and, one of them being struck on the coco by a cocoanut, was unable to escape before he was bitten by one of the infected animals. This unfortunate gentleman immediately felt the tendency to carry on controversy of the nature of these monkey factions. Now, it was noted by the eminent professor De Lirious that the elocutionary efforts of these monkeys took the form of metrical satires. unfortunate prospector felt these same tendencies. had no trouble finding epithets to hurl, but, in the hospital to which he was removed, he could find no cocoanuts to throw and consequently he died of locomotor ataxia. His colleagues, wishing to commemorate his sad fate founded a pamphlet, written in verse, and of the same nature as the gobbling gabble of the gabbling monkey factions who caused his death. This pamphlet, introduced into our college paper, is entrusted each year to the care of those deemed most worthy to carry on its noble work. The coat of arms of the staff represents the event which the pamphlet commemorates. It is a monkey proper hanging by its prehensile caudal appendage from the branch of a banyan tree, with a cocoanut in each hand and a cigar in its mouth. The motto underneath reads: "Non Serviam" or "They shall not pass." Professor De Lirious takes this opportunity to thank those who aided him in his research. Special mention should be made of Dynamite who blew the research parties to a bang-up celebration at the end of their arduous task.

Signed on behalf of the staff.

OSTRICH.

OUR COLLEGE FAD

There is a fad about the place, It can be seen on every face; Some say clothes will make the man, I wonder if the moustache can.

Some grow large and some grow small, And some of them grow not at all. Some are thick and some are thin And some of them won't e'en begin.

Even the youngsters on a bet, Declare that they will have one yet, And some of them are in despair, For on their lip there's not a hair.

Oh! what a sad affair it is To see the students come to this; Oh! why not introduce a fad That will not make the youngsters sad.

A FATEFUL NIGHT

'Twas on the night of Halloween, And Pop for fun was very keen; Forth from a nearby room he stole Into the hall to have a bowl. Above him, in the corridor, The turnips rumbled on the floor; So he thought, as he heard no other sound, That none of the prefects were around. He raised his arm above his head And down the hall the turnip sped; It hit a door with a deafening crash, Then for his room Pop made a dash. When suddenly from a doorway near He saw a dark-robed form appear. Clammy sweat oozed from his brow, "Ye gods," he thought, "I'm in soup now." Perhaps 'twas an accident, perhaps 'twas luck; When Pop that mighty kick did duck, For when that foot whizzed through the air, Pop escaped it by a hair. The prefect then was seeing red, But cooled, and ordered Pop to bed Who slunk away with a shameful face, Knowing this did not end his case. Next morning Pop received the call, To remove himself from Dalton Hall. Poor Pop, we sympathize with thee, 'Tis hard to live in the dormitory.

AUTUMN (THE FALL)

At the last big time in the old League hall Gene met a girl so sweet and tall, A damsel so divine and fair Gene muttered when he saw her there: "Amo, amare, amavi, amatum."

His eyes on this sweet dame oft' turned, His heart within him strongly yearned, So when the time for parting came He asked me would he take this dame: "Moneo, monere, monui, monitum."

But other chum, this girl, admired, To take her home he strong desir'd, But he yielded to the hand of fate When he saw the smitten Gene await: "Capio, capere, cepi, captum."

All the way home he talked with glee Of the jolly times in S. D. C. Then she in turn did tell weird tales Of stunts pulled off in Prince of Wales. "Audio, audiri, audivi, auditum."

When Gene came back to college life Amid the toils of study and strife, His rival in love he tried to cheer By saying to old Monty dear: "Fido, periddisti, puellam, claram."

POP'S LAMENT

Gentlemen, I say to you My average is twenty-two For which marks I had to pay Three hundred cold simoleons.

"The SENIOR'S FAREWELL"

"Our college days are numbered," said a senior to his men; "We will never meet the Abbies on the football field again. But before we leave St. Dunstan's one thing doth remain, We'll trim the student body in a last grand football game."

The senior's challenge posted, Cullen then takes up his pen, Accepts the challenge, picks a team to test the senior men. Malone, our snappy quarterback, and Tingley with his moushtache, Procured an A I referee for the memorable clash.

That afternoon the Juniors gathered together in cliques

To hurl reproachful epithets at the class of '26.

But loud as was their boasting, all through that afternoon, That evening they were meek as clams, for the Seniors changed their tune.

When the whistle blew for action the Seniors made things hum.

And our forwards, George and Austin, nearly killed the Juniors' scrum.

With good old Lan for fullback, and the half line working fine.

The Juniors soon were forced right back upon their fivevard line.

Here they struggled long and wildly, and the Juniors strongly swore,

They would not let the Seniors pass, but Gerard made a score.

The Juniors gnashed their teeth with rage, and played with strength and vim,

"Come on, boys," Junior Tingley said, "We must not let them win."

But in spite of all their efforts the Juniors could not score, The game ended three to nothing, with the Seniors in the fore.

Now, Juniors, don't be discouraged, tho now you can't play ball;

You n'er can tell what the Fates will do, e'er you leave old Dalton Hall.

And when in life you're out of luck, and the world is beating you,

Remember the class of '26 in good old S. D. U.

The Duke, an old man with a Bushy Beard, sent his Gardner with a Creamer to milk his White Cow. On the way he saw a Crow and a Duck, and, by Cripes, a Rabbit going like a Streak Pop-ped out so close that he could Kick-him. He Smelt something, caught his Moustache to Pull-it, and a Grasshopper hopped out and was devoured by a Frog. When he got there he was as sour as a Pig, and, Punching the bovine, said, "Sea Cow". Then the Widow said, "Rub-her, John." At this he picked up a Spike and shouted, "By the great Tobias, if that Bull-headed, Lummox-faced old Pussy Cat don't stop her grazing I'll Skinner." The Lady Nellie said with a Si, "You are as rough as Squeers." But he answered, "By Gosh if the old Fish tries to hook any more, I'll put a charge of Dynamite under her, that will Trainor." All this time Scrooge, Bud, and that Plug of a boy, Teddy, had Shakespeare reading about the Doodads, and Jiggs was watching a Stork on Stilts trying to step over a Steele Tank. Then Spud and Smike stole the Pies, and so the Doctor and Bishop had no desert.
