

VIEW FROM THE BRIDGE

REV. J. R. KELLY, M.A.

No cry yet of "Land Ho!" from the looking, but the signs have been there for a day or so already, more flotsam than usual on the sea, warm little breezes out of nowhere, and amid the salt air fleeting but intensifying scent of soil and vegetation. Within hours land will loom, we'll be up the narrows, tied up alongside, another voyage over. There will be the usual greetings, official clearances, discharge of cargo, etc.

And there will be good-bys. Goodbyes to most who will just go on leave and back for the next sailing; goodbyes for good to our top ratings who are due for transfer to the big ships, or our paths may never cross again. Actual leave takings don't lend themselves to much inherent expression. So just before the rush let's get in a brief farewell "from the bridge". What to say? . . . Well we're at writing literature here, so let's make it something right simple a la Peanuts.

"Bye now. Let's remember the other. Of the details only hodge-podge will remain. Right and precious there may be the day when a friendship or life was born, a few hours at stand out in lecture or library or chapel, when the light seemed to flood in on top of us and all through us; a few moments of exhilaration or intense emotion connected with drama, sport or simple partying. And on top of these and mixed all through them inexplicable moments floating: the look on some girl's face in the cafeteria one day, the dumb answer some fellow gave in class, the look somebody's desk, the gait of some professor crossing theampus.

But for the big truths (whose simple and clear contemplation gave us such joy and peace during the Renewal) let's keep them clearly in every storm; they will be a sure guide back to port, and a steady bond and contact with home and Alma Mater:

it's your world.

These countries have a lot in common. Every one is no place for you if all you have to offer is lofty ideals. These are countries that need realists—people who are ready to get down to work. And come down to earth. Literally. Don't kid yourself . . . signing up with this outfit will mean slugging it out through a tough, demanding job. That's the only way you'll fill the needs of these countries. And who knows, maybe you'll have a few of your own filled. What is CUSO? It's a national agency created to develop and promote overseas service opportunities for Canadians. It arranges for the placement of qualified men and women in countries that request their services. If you're sent to a country it's because they've asked for you. Or someone like you. How does CUSO work? Abroad, it works through different international agencies who all assist in the placement of personnel. In Canada it works through local co-ordinating committees, located in most universities, but serving the whole community. What kind of people are needed? People with something to offer. People with things like knowing how to teach mathematics or grow wheat, how to clean a wound or build a bridge. These countries need people who are adaptable and mature. People with initiative. People who can earn respect, and give it. Think about it for a minute. You'll know what you have to offer. What is the selection procedure like? Tough. Because we don't believe in sending underdeveloped people to underdeveloped countries. Preliminary screening is carried out, where possible, by local committees. CUSO then nominates candidates to governments and agencies requesting personnel, who make the final selection. CUSO also makes arrangements for preparatory and orientation courses. How do you apply? Complete two copies of the personal information form which you can get from local CUSO representatives at any Canadian university, or from Executive Secretary of CUSO, 75 Albert St., Ottawa.
