

The Funny Man

Lafontaine—Am I right Albert when I say “The toast was drunk in silence.”

St. Pierre—Oh what a bad mistake ; you should say “The toast was eaten in silence.”

Larry—The idea of you letting Curley go around saying that he made a man of you. He doesn't say that about me.

Red—No, but I heard him saying that he did his best.

She (With a sigh)—Don't you like the young girls?

Gazoo (adoringly)—You're the dearest old thing I ever saw.

(Johnny has not yet recovered)

McA-l y on proving that souls are simple is congratulated by the Professor for his forcing himself and the class to believe that S-p-h-n is a 'very' simple soul.

The Girl—You really think that you can read my eyes?

Rene—Certainly.

The Girl—Well, I don't think so, because if you could you would have gone long ago.

Since the Professor in Physics explained that dark substances will not reflect light, “Bud” has been wondering how the black twins manage to see each other.

THE USE OF THE SYLLOGISM.

Andie—Jack, your beard is red on one side and white on the other.

Jack—And I am feeling blue.

Andie—Therefore you would serve as a flag.

Frank—It is too bad that I cannot be present at the dance, but I will introduce you to a nice clever young man.

The Miss—I don't want a clever young man, I want you !

Lafontaine (in the music store)—Have you “ Kissed Me in the Moonlight.”

The Girl (indignantly)—How dare you, sir ! I never saw you before.

Sinnot—You have never asked me if I could support your daughter, sir.

Prospective Father-in-law—Don't worry, my dear boy, Delia will see to that.

St. Pierre— Give me two “ stamp posts.”

Girl—What kind.

St. Pierre—With the king's face on, I guess !

Life is a waste of wearisome hours,
Which seldom the rose of enjoyment adorns,
And the heart that is soonest awake to the flowers,
Is always the first to be touched by the thorns.

Young men are fitter to invent than to judge ;
fitter for execution than for counsel ; and fitter for new projects than for settled business.

There is nothing more contemptible than a bald man who pretends to have hair.
