

LOST

Pulchritudinous Dixie with vine leaves twined in his hair
 Came to old Saint Dunstan's from the region of Copley Square.
 Truly a man's man was Dixie, sophisticate, poised and keen
 Nothing he cared for women, a menace as yet unseen.

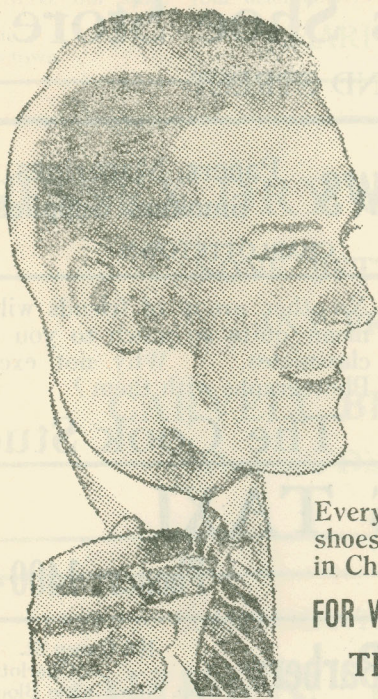

Thursday the time of adventure, our handsome hero fell,
 Cupid smote 'twixt the joints of his armour, O sharper than we can tell
 So Dixie and beautiful maiden smiled lovingly each at each
 As down at the friendly Nobana he discussed at date with a peach.

She stole away from the tea room while Dixie inhaled his tea,
 So sweetly found, so bitterly lost, O where is the truant she?
 All night he searched the city, vainly he knocks at doors,
 Disconsolate back to Saint Dunstan's he creeps in the wee small hours.

With pen dipped in fire and acid he writes his indignant grief
 While she tells the whole tale to her girl friend according to current belief.

Now misogynist Dixie, disillusioned, will look upon women no more Thrice armed 'gainst the arrows of Cupid, with cynical wisdom in store!

Hoping you are the same.—Crawley Moses.
