

MAC'S RUMBLINGS & GRUMBLINGS

BOOZE RULES

Will there be a general relaxation of campus booze rules during carnival? If not we will be taking another giant step towards a boring winter break . . . However, it is not difficult to see the reasoning behind the administration's booze orders when you look at the way some of the jerks around here operate under the influence. Meander on up to the can in any residence, on any floor, any Sunday morning. You won't believe the nauseating mess, stench, etc. Take a look around at a basketball or hockey game some day. Watch the drunks. Until drinking can be handled properly around here, no one is going to legalize the imbibing of nincompoops . . . Tom Forrestall has a brilliant idea. He suggests that girls be allowed into boys residences, and vice versa, during winter carnival. That's a real brainstorm, Tom, but it won't happen around here for another fifty years . . . Leon Berrouard suggests that it is about time the boys were given permissions equal to or better than those the girls presently enjoy. The words he uses to describe the ridiculousness of the whole situation can't be printed without upsetting a whole lot of innocent people.

CLASS PARTIES

When are the parties going to start again? So far there have been a mere two, which is certainly not enough. The classes are still worried about the stupid jerks who come stag, get loaded, and fight all night . . . Another reason is that the class executives would rather throw dances in the gym since they are more profitable than the private parties which are more of a blast . . . It's possible that the jerks who ruin the parties have wisened up, but none wants to take the risk . . . One of the biggest worries of the SDUSU executive is that there are not enough students taking part in campus activities. The same few are always carrying the ball, while the remainder of our "let-somebody-else-do-it" student body sits around picking their collective noses . . . Why don't they get the Head Chef to stand out front checking numbers in the cafeteria? He could listen to the compliments he would undoubtedly receive from his clients. Want to bet that the food would improve in a week? . . . Several students witnessed an interesting scene in the cafeteria a few Sundays ago. Brian Steinberg and Bill Berri-gan came wondering into brunch a few seconds after the noon deadline, and were told that there was no more food. They grumbled but settled for cereal and coffee. At about 12:30 two girls came straggling in and were given STEAKS . . . Mike Sullivan complains that there is not enough friendly scuzz on campus . . . Baroo, naturally, concurs.

A MODEL PARLIAMENT

The main reason that there will not be a Model Parliament this year is that no one man has the time to do all the organizing, etc. As is usual around here, once a key individual backs out, everybody backs out . . . Two enterprising young gentlemen have taken over the operation of the Stern's laundry depot in the basement of Memorial. Starting this week they will be open daily at 1:30 p.m., and after supper. . . The Basketball Saints must have been the victims of some sort of plot when they played the Mount Allison Hawks in Sackville last week. They played well enough to win by 25, but they lost by 13. Both of the referees were qualified, which means that the rotten calls couldn't have been all honest mistakes . . . Many students cannot understand how we can have a federated carnival and still hold off on the federation of the two universities.

THE EXAM SCHEDULE

It is sincerely hoped that the final exam schedule now posted in the library is somebody's idea of a joke. As it stands now, a lot of people have three exams a day. A larger group is worried about their summer jobs which are in jeopardy because of the late closing date. May 9 is a little late when you consider that the schools in Ontario and Quebec will shut in April to let their charges take a gander at Expo before they start working. Another unfortunate aspect of the schedule is that exams start the day after classes are supposed to end . . . The faculty at Prince of Wales College has demanded (otherwise they will make things hot for some people) that the Carnival Parade Committee withdraw the float now being built by the class of '69. Rest assured that the float is in perfectly good taste, and merely expresses the opinions of the majority of '69ers.

THE END

Rumblings and Grumblings got into a good deal of trouble before Christmas for an article we printed about PWC. We had promised ourselves to cool it, and to stay away from a distasteful subject, but this is a bit too much. If this is the kind of crap we can expect from our friends on Grafton St., to heck with them . . . On that kind note I would like to take this opportunity to tender my resignation as editor of Rumblings and Grumblings, with the hope that someone will find the time to take over. Whoever does, I hope that he will not be swayed by the stupid comments that supposedly intelligent people will direct his way (mostly from behind his back) . . .

Yours Truly,

Mike McCormick, '69...

Dear Readers,

I was going to get my slave to write this column, but he told me that all slaves were illiterate. He asked me if I knew that it was my duty to feed him, whereupon he insisted that he wanted steak for dinner. Naturally, I couldn't afford him, so I freed him. Anyway, people were getting the wrong idea -- he insisted on introducing me as his mistress.

Q. My boyfriend has a terrible problem. He has never been able to break the habit of bottle feeding.

-- D. LaRose

A. Relax! All good Saints are the same; they just graduate from milk to beer. You should be thankful that his mother started him off on bottles.

Q. Murphy, think much?

A. As little as possible. Thinking might lead me to a fate worse than death -- a life of philosophy.

Q. How can I get my dream man to ask me to the Carnival Ball? I'll just die if he doesn't!

-- Shirley Barry

A. Your approach is terrible. Eve's first law is "what you want desperately you never get." You have to start around December saying that you despise balls and that you wouldn't be seen in daylight with him. By the second law (of opposites) you're sure to be asked, and there's at least an even chance it will be him.

Q. Here's a medieval manuscript I found but couldn't translate. Could you, please Murph, translate it for me. I think it may be by Chaucer. Maybe some of your readers could help.

--Dr. O'Grady

A. We're glad to be of help. Here's the text, readers.

Whilst sitting in ye parking lotte

Deciding where to drinke

I nevere thought of getting caughte

Untille I saw ye finkke.

"Ah ha!" quoth he so merrilie,

"My boyes, what have wee here?"

"Why nothing, kindeste Sirr," quoth we,

"Save thyrty-six bottles of beere."

"What's thatte?" saith he with greedie grinne,

"Whot here is twentie-one?"

For it is a most terrible synne

If "amongst you there's not one."

A liquere licence lakked we alle;

And to hys partnere gave a calle

"Come take there bloodie beere."

Oh blackest bleakest Monday morne

Before our judge and peeres,
