

THE GRADUATES

CORNELIUS J. CAMPBELL

. . . . . " 'Tis the pre-eminence
Of friendship only to impute excellence."

—Donne—"The Storm."

One February night about the middle of the first decade of this present century the weary traveller from Charlottetown to Glasgow might have been struck by portents hanging over an old farmhouse set back from the road in a grove of firs. He may have seen the northern lights dance in jubilation; he may have felt the north wind blow with a mightier breath; he may have even seen, if he was fey, the fairies with their gifts hovering over that old farm awaiting the advent to the world of the Valedictorian of the class of '26. Of course these omens,, together with the unprecedented snowfall of that February, may not have in the eyes of the unobservant, any connection with our hero, but we have it on good authority that the weathercock on the barn roof crowed long and lustily on the morn of our hero's birth.

During his infancy there was nothing specially present to mark our subject as one apart, unless it might be an extreme fondness for tearing papers and falling into the brook. At a tender age he removed, with his parents, to Tracadie, where he received his early education. In 1917 Con went to Alberton to reside with his uncle, who has left the indelible impress of a mind as broad as knowledge itself upon him. An omnivorous reader, Con found ample opportunity to gratify his tastes among the classic volumes of Father Campbell's library, and, when in 1922 our hero entered St. Dunstan's he came with an intellect already steeped in classic lore, and an imagination fired by the deeds of the heroes of old.

Of his course here, little needs to be said. In the classroom his teachers found him a willing pupil and an original mind. These qualities procured him well-deserved recognition and, for the past two years, he has edited a department of the Red and White, to which magazine he has been a faithful and brilliant contributor. His ability on the debating floor has been recognized, and his rallying call to the people, when, as leader of the opposition, he exposed the corruption of the McDonald-Doirion administration, was mainly responsible for the terrible defeat suffered by that party in the House.

On the athletic field our hero has left a tradition difficult to surpass. The gridiron, the arena and the hand-ball alley are the fields of his greatest triumphs, but he stands well to the front in basketball and baseball, and is an opponent not to be despised on the tennis court. His hobbies are, we might say, the classics and shooting, and, if we are permitted to prophesy, we believe the bar will claim this son of St. Dunstan's, and we know he will be an ornament and an honor to it and to his Alma Mater. Good luck, Con.

JOSEPH HAROLD DRISCOLL

It was in the year 1905 that Indian River burst into the ranks of fame, for, on April 30th of that year, Harold J. Driscoll was born within its precincts.

His primary education was received at the district school of New Annan, except the last two years, which were spent at Kensington High School. This, however, was not the zenith of Harold's ambitions, but, like Alexander the Great, he desired new worlds to conquer, so we see him enrolled as a freshman at St. Dunstan's University in the fall of 1921.

Harold has made a splendid showing in his new field of endeavour, which, we feel sure, is a certain indication of his success in future life. Besides maintaining a high record throughout his college career, he has taken a deep interest in college activities.

Harold's modest temperament characterized his every action, and, with a knowledge of this, we shall refrain from speaking of his merits in eulogistic terms. He was always ready to play a part in every College activity, but especially in athletics. Besides being a valuable asset to his class team in basketball, hockey and baseball, he excelled in football, and as captain of second team, he won an enviable reputation in that branch of athletics. He also took part in debates and had the honour of being chosen Postmaster-General in the McDonald Cabinet.

Harold has given us no intimation of his plans for the future, and, since conjectural opinions have been so often at fault, we shall not say anything definite on the subject. But, let him act on the principles which guided him while at St. Dunstan's, and we can assure him success in whatever course he may choose to pursue.

ADOLPHUS GILLIS

Providence smiled, indeed, upon the little village of St. Peter's when, on November 21, 1903, Adolphus Gillis was ushered into the world. Here he grew into lusty boyhood, and—well, since we have no real foundation for the tales which we have heard of his various escapades in his younger years, probably we should refrain from imparting them to others. But here it was that he gained his early education and fitted himself for deeper studies.

September, 1920, saw Dolph enter the walls of St. Dunstan's, from which he now sets out, after six years of diligent work, a graduate well stored with knowledge. During his college career, he has endeared himself to the hearts of all, and it is with the greatest regret that we must now see him depart from our midst.

Few students have played so prominent a part in College activities as has Dolph. The great trust which the student-body has always placed in him may be seen from the fact that during the past year he has been president of the S. D. U. A. A., as well as a business manager of the Red and White. In Mock Parliament and on the debating floor, he has ever been an outstanding figure, and many are the opponents whom he has crushed with his astounding flow of language and well advanced arguments. In musical circles Dolph has, also, been a prominent participator, and, for years has been a highly valued member of the College choir, while often has his voice been heard in harmony with the gathered students who may frequently be heard joined in singing the favorite songs of the time.

In athletics Dolph shines, perhaps, more than in any other sphere. For three years he has been a valued member of the senior football team, and his strength and prowess have long been the dread of opponents on the gridiron; nor has his part been small in leading S. D. U. to victory and the Island championship. Yet his athletic activities have not been confined solely to football. Throughout his course he has ever shown the keenest interest in Canada's national game, and for the past two years has filled the responsible position of first team goaler, handling the most difficult shots with the ease of a John Ross Roach. Basketball, also, has claimed Dolph. as a supporter and his figure has long been familiar to the followers of the game.

It is, indeed, difficult to deal justly with such a member of the graduating class as Dolph Gillis. Always has he been a real gentlemen to everyone, and we all join in wishing him, indeed, a fond adieu, knowing that, whatever may be his chosen path of life, he will ever play a prominent and successful part.

ARCHIE D. GILLIS

"The man worth while is the man with a smile,
When everything goes dead wrong."

If we may accept the words of the poet as a true criterion, then Archie is truly a man worth while. When we first saw Archie, we were immediately impressed by that winning smile which has made him so many friends since the day when he first came to St. Dunstan's to continue his preparation for his future career.

Archie was first introduced to the world at Morell, P. E. I., on the 16th day of February, 1905. At the age of five he moved to Bath, Maine, where, at first in the parochial school, and later in the public schools of that city, he was initiated into the mysteries of the Society of the Birch Rod. In 1919 he returned to the land of his forefathers to begin his studies at St. Dunstan's.

By dint of many a hard struggle, known only to himself, Archie succeeded in conquering an early propensity to procrastination, and the measure of this success is manifested in the results of his hard-won contest—a diligent application to study, and the high standing he has maintained in his junior and senior years.

Archie has never been an outstanding athlete, his endeavours in that line being chiefly confined to the grid-iron, where, contrary to what one might expect of a man of Archie's uncombative nature, he held down a position in the forward line of the senior scrum. There, as always, he played the game with the old, true spirit of St. Dunstan's. Many a time have we seen him emerge from a flying tangle of kicking limbs, or buck the opponent's forward line, his eyes fired with the light of battle, an inheritance from his fighting Highland ancestors, but with the same irrepressible smile upon his lips that marked him always as a "good head" and a good sport.

As the curtain is about ring down on the last act of his career at St. Dunstan's, we feel that one bright light is going from our life. A cheerful companion, a true friend, a man whom we have never known to do or say anything mean such is Archie Gillis. May success crown his efforts in whatever career he shall elect to follow, and may the bright sunshine of his smile continue to cheer those whom he shall meet along the pathway of life.

GERALD KEEFE

"Titles of honor add not to his worth,
Who is himself an honor to his title."

Briarwood, a picturesque location overlooking Cascumpec Bay, is distinguished as the birthplace of Gerald, whose genial nature seems to have imbibed a great deal of the charm and beauty which Nature has lavished upon that spot.

Gerald came to St. Dunstan's in the fall of 1919 and spent a profitable year. He did not return until the fall of 1923, and thus he honors the class of '26 as one of its members.

Endowed with a keen wit and a sense of humor, Gerald soon gained due popularity at St. Dunstan's, and many a pleasant recreation hour was whiled away in his room. He did not, however, neglect his studies. His rank in class is high, and his ability as a debater and parliamentarian unquestioned.

The part he took in athletics marks him as one of St. Dunstan's best all-round men. His ability as captain of the first football team, and as a quarterback was largely instrumental in bringing the P. E. Island laurels to St. Dunstan's last fall. He proved an effective hockey player as a member of the first team, and his brilliant performance on the mound brought victory to the Reds last spring. Basketball and handball also received a due share of his attention.

On the whole, Gerald is a student of whom St. Dunstan's and his fellow-classmates may well be proud; and, in bidding him adieu they are certain that, whatever may be his future vocation, his ability shall bring him success, and his character and generous nature shall win him the respect and friendship of men, for he is endowed with those qualities which mark him as a "man."

CORNELIUS LANDRIGAN

"To those who know thee not, no words can paint;
And those who know thee, know all words are faint."

Shortly after the dawn of the twentieth century, one morn, in russet mantle clad, came walking over the sparkling meadows of East King's County announcing the nativity of this member of the class of '26. Cornelius, diminutively called "Con," received his primary education at his district school, in Sturgeon, and there, having attained to that degree in the cultivation of intellect that is hardly ever reached amid the ripples from the fount of the rural sources of knowledge, and desirous of drinking deeper of the Pierian spring, he entered St. Dunstan's in the fall of 1921.

That Cornelius has won for himself the esteem of his classmates and the faculty, can easily be shown. In the classroom and debating hall he holds a position of no mean repute. He has acquired a sound knowledge of the doctrine of St. Thomas and Aristotle, and his splendid arguments in the weighty questions which have come up for discussion during the last two years would cause the philosophers of old to contemplate.

In athletics he has taken an active part, especially in football. He was selected last fall as the football representative, the duties of which he has fulfilled to the complete satisfaction of all.

He has played senior football for the last three seasons, holding the important position of wing halfback; and in many a hard-fought game, when it appeared that our team would be forced to drink of that deadly potion, "defeat," did this athletic blonde cause our opponents to partake of its bitter flavors. Although not a star hockeyist, he, nevertheless, played on the famous Senators this year. On every occasion, Con proved himself to be a true sport, not over-jubilant in the moment of victory nor depressed in the moment of defeat.

Cornelius is a man of unassuming disposition, and, during his sojourn amongst us, he has endeared himself to all.

Con is very reticent as to his intended profession, but we have no hesitancy in saying that a man gifted with such rare abilities will earn for himself a reputation as one of St. Dunstan's most illustrious sons; and, whatever may be his field of activities, his numerous friends at St. Dunstan's wish him "Godspeed."

JAMES ARTHUR MALONE

"Blest with each talent and each art to please."

A fitting eulogy for such a man as James Arthur Malone postulates much greater ability than I am able to claim. The peaceful community of Green Bay, in June, 1904, welcomed Art to this world, and even that sunny month seems to have showered upon him many of its genial characteristics.

After spending the customary time in Millvale School, he entered St. Dunstan's in the fall of 1920, and has since given his Alma Mater reason to be proud in calling him one of her sons.

At St. Dunstan's, Art soon became known as a "good head," and has distinguished himself both as a scholar and as an athlete. His performances as a member of the second football team have always been efficient and spectacular, while his speed and endurance as a runner did much to bring the laurels to the senior's relay team last fall. He would, doubtless, be a veritable wizard at hockey were it not for the fact that he does not skate.

As a debater and a member of Mock Parliament, Art is an orator of no mean ability, and on many occasions has turned the scales in his favor by his superb Johnsonian oratory. The substitution which he upheld to replace modern trial by jury was worthy of Solon, and would, doubtless, have been adopted were it not for the unreasoning opposition of certain students who probably feared that, in future time, they might become victims of its thorough efficiency.

Art has not divulged his plans for the future, but whatever walk he may choose in life, we know that he will do his duty nobly and uphold the traditions of old St. Dunstan's, who, with best wishes for success, sadly bids him adieu.

PETER HENRY McAULAY

In the parish register of Morell, in which are inscribed the names of many worthy men, the birth is recorded, in September, 1905, of this prominent member of the class of '26.

The pastoral quiet and congenial atmosphere of his native district seems to have entered largely into his composition and endowed him with a serenity of nature and a wealth of good-humor which has gained for him much popularity among the student body.

At the public school near his home, Peter received the first insight in the mysteries of learning, and, when he had mastered all that a primary education could offer, in order to better prepare him for his part in life's great drama he enrolled at St. Dunstan's in 1921, and, by diligently applying himself, he has completed his classical course, and now stands ready to leave her sheltering walls.

Always a firm believer in the theory that education is better obtained when combined with a fair amount of sport, Peter has taken part in all forms of athletics on the campus, handball alley, or in the rink. In football he excelled, and, as a defender of the senior title for two years, he proved himself a rock on which the hopes of many an opponent were wrecked, and the honor of his Alma Mater preserved. He bears, besides, the distinction of kicking a field goal during a match, the first time in ten years that such a feat was performed here, at least, to our knowledge.

In his studies, Peter has given evidence of a mental capacity well above the average, and, above all, of a clear mathematical mind. As a debater he has shown coolness and resource, which no doubt will stand him in good stead in the future.

To conjecture what calling in life Peter will follow is risky, but in whatever profession he takes up, we feel that he is well fitted to grapple with any difficulties that fortune may send, and, in bidding him adieu, the faculty and students extend to him their best wishes for every success.

AUGUSTINE A. MACDONALD

Saint Dunstain's this year loses in Austin Macdonald one of the most diligent and likable students it has been her privilege to fit for the strenuous battles of life.

The prosperous district of Glenfinnan is his birthplace, and Austin will tell you that it is the best place on earth. Of course we all have our opinions, and many of us are inclined to differ with him in that point. Be that as it may, very early in life we find our friend setting out with his books under this arm for his district school, and there he first imbibed the rudiments of education. This first delving into the depths of learning only served to create in him an ambition for deeper study, and, as a result, in September, 1921, he turns his steps towards Saint Dunstan's.

Since coming here he has applied himself diligently to his studies, and year after year has found him nearer his goal, till now he is about to pass out from these halloewd walls to take up his career in some other field of endeavour. Already with a B. L. degree to his credit, we feel sure he will be successful in his B. A. examinations in June.

To know Austin is to like him—the more you know him the better you like him. He is always willing to take his part in the various duties of college life, and his quick smile and ready good-humour has won for him many friends in the classroom and on the campus.

In athletics Austin excels as a football player, and, as a member of this year's senior team, has won the reputation of being second to none on the forward line. It will be with difficulty that his position on the team will be filled next year.

In our debating society he has also been prominent, and on every occasion has worthily upheld the arguments of his side; no doubt more will be heard of him in this line in the future.

As to the course Austin will pursue after leaving here, we can do nothing but conjecture; yet one thing is certain, and that is—whatever may be his aim in life he will always do his best.

BENJAMIN JOSEPH McDONALD

Among the many who have passed through the doors of St. Dunstan's as graduates, there has been none more worthy of note, nor any more popular with his fellows than Ben McDonald. Charlottetown proudly claims him as her own, and, it was there, on July 9, 1903, that Ben first saw light. At Queen Square School he acquired his early education, and was considered a student of the highest rank. That he has since kept up the good work is proclaimed by his record throughout his college career. Having successfully passed the matriculation examinations, Ben was a student at Prince of Wales College for a year, and, three years later, September, 1921, he began his studies at S. D. U.

For four years Ben has been an outstanding figure in every phase of college life. Quiet and unassuming, yet frequently indulging in his good-humoured jokes, Ben has earned an unsurpassed popularity with his classmates and fellow students. In studies he has acquired a vast store of knowledge, and goes forth from the doors of his Alma Mater well fitted for the world.

In athletics Ben has long shown skill and good sportsmanship and has figured prominently in every line of sport. For years he has been such an aggressive forward on the senior football squad that his opponents seem to quake whenever his husky form appears upon the field. Many a time, moreover, have the students wildly cheered to see Ben stick-handling through the enemy's defence like a professional, to sag the twine for S. D. U. in hockey. Ben is, also, a basketball player of high calibre, and for two years has been basketball representative for S. D. U. In baseball, as well, he has long held a position on the college nine, and his familiar figure has often been seen in city league baseball.

In debate he has frequently shown his skill as a public speaker, and the ease with which he has put at naught his opponent's arguments leads us to predict a brilliant career in oratory.

Greatly will Ben be missed among his associates from whom he now departs, but, never will he be forgotten. It is with the greatest regret that we look forward to his graduation day, yet we know that, whatever he may take in hand in the future, he will ever come through gloriously and brilliantly.

GEORGE MACDONALD

One morning some twenty years ago, any curious individual might have been struck by the fact that all the Caledonian Clubs were out with flags, by an almost universal addiction to plaid ties, and by the broad smiles on the faces of sundry well known and dour Scotchmen. It is actually related as a fact, but the writer doubts the veracity of the tale, that four well known Macdonalds went into a certain store, and purchased, for the sum of five cents, a bottle of ginger ale which they, having demanded four glasses, solemnly divided, and drank to the new George. The clerk who served them rushed out and spread the news that King Edward was dead, and that George V. had succeeded to the throne, and, when he discovered his error he was completely mystified.

But you, fair reader, need not be; for the new George was none other than our hero, destined to achieve eminence and to reflect honour on the great and mighty Clanronald. George, under the stimulating climate of the North Shore of Prince Edward Island, grew up a sturdy youth, and attended, when the proper time came, the district school of Blooming Point. There his achievements caused much wagging of heads on the part of village wiseacres who predicted various careers for him, varying all the way from a St. Thomas Aquinas or a Napoleon to the prophecy of one, whom George had the habit of playing pranks upon, who dogmatically insisted that the gallows would and could be the only fitting and proper end for our hero. But, be that at it may, he entered St. Dunstan's in the spring of '21, determined to pursue learning to her very stronghold and capture her.

George has had an enviable record. In the classroom he was ever one of the best, while his recognized literary ability brought him the high honour, which he has nobly sustained, of editing Red and White. His leadership of the early government of the year, and his presidency of the Senior Literary and Debating Society, show his ability and popularity with his fellow students.

On the football field, too, George displayed the same zeal and good sportsmanship which characterized him in all his activities, and he can look back with pleasure and pride to many a hard-fought game when victory trembled in the balance; but unselfish team-play and undaunted spirit carried off the palm.

Where George's future sphere lies we know not, but we say safely that he is a worthy representative of a great people, and it is such as he who have made the Scot so potent a force for good in this world.

FRANCIS GERARD McDONALD

On February 12th, 1905, was born the subject of this delineation, in the quaint little village of Orwell Cove, and here, in quiet, were spent the first few months of his early life.

Next we find Gerard, a sturdy little chap of ten years, at play with his friends on the sunny slopes of central Rollo Bay, and attending the village school hard by, within whose "emblazoned walls" and under whose charred roof were acquired the rudiments of his education.

Having completed his course at school, and finding that still his desire for knowledge was not appeased, but, on the contrary, had only been aroused, he began to consider what next to do, and in the fall of 1921 we find him entering S. D. U.

From the first, his course here has been a success; he has succeeded not only in intellectual, but also in moral and physical education, as may be seen from his successful passage of the annual grading examinations, and his proficiency in the field of athletics, where we see him on the gridiron; a capable and energetic hockey player; and an active participant in baseball.

Gerard, possessing a quiet and retiring disposition, has endeared himself to all, and no doubt those who remain will miss his cheery salutations on the campus; while we, his classmates, knowing him as we do, and appreciating his many fine qualities of honesty, kindness, and cheerfulness, feel quite sure that friends and success await him wherever he goes, which is our sincere wish in bidding him farewell.

CHARLES RAYMOND McIVOR

The subject of this sketch was born in the beautiful and prosperous village of Kinkora, in the year 1903, during that most bounteous season when Nature showers her choicest gifts on mother earth. The privilege of such a birthplace may in itself be considered a distinction, as Charles now has the honor of attaching his name to the already long list of alumni which Kinkora claims, many of whom now occupy prominent positions in the different professions.

Charles received his primary education at his district school, which he entered at a very early age. After a long and earnest struggle with the many difficulties which the prescribed course presented, he succeeded in graduating from that fount of learning after imbibing all the lore which it could supply. Then, realizing that his store of knowledge was yet quite inadequate, he decided to continue his studies in a more advanced institute of learning.

In September, 1920, we find him enrolled as a student of St. Dunstan's, where he continued to apply himself to his studies with even greater zest than hitherto. In his search for knowledge he was ever ready and willing to employ all his time and ability in acquiring a thorough understanding of the very many weighty questions which confront everyone who undertakes the onerous task of equipping himself with a good Christian education.

During his college days Charles has made many friends among the student body, as he was ever a companion of upright character and pleasing disposition. In times of leisure his room was frequently the haunt of many who sought relief from the monotony of their studies in the ready wit and humorous conversation which he never failed to display on such occasions.

As a member of the debating society he has always proved himself a worthy opponent of those who had the misfortune of being listed as his adversaries, and of having to combat his fiery eloquence.

This member of the graduating class is rather reticent as regards his chosen walk of life; but, judging by the ability he has displayed as a student, we have no fear as to his success in whatever field of action he may choose; and we take this opportunity of bidding him a fond adieu and of extending to him our heartfelt wishes for his success.

GEORGE MACKINNON

"Nemo Me Impune Lacessit"

To Alexandra, situated about seven miles from Charlottetown, belongs the distinction of being the birth-place of this popular member of the graduating class of 1926, and to George belongs the honor of being the first pupil from Alexandra to complete the course at St. Dunstan's University.

George was born in December, 1903. His early education was received at his home school, from which he successfully passed the matriculation examinations, and entered P. W. C., in 1918. In 1920 he successfully completed the work prescribed for the second year, and issued forth with his second year certificate and first class license, and for the ensuing year was engaged as teacher in Bunbury. He next entered upon his duties as a teacher of Queen Square School, and for the past four years he has been a valued member of the teaching staff of that school. That his teaching has been a success is evident from the results he has obtained, and from his popularity with the pupils of the school.

George began his studies at St. Dunstan's in December, 1922, and was successful in winning his B. L., in the following June, attaining second position in his class.

In all our dealings with George, whether as a student or as a teacher, we have always found him a gentleman.

It cannot be said that he took an active part in the athletics about the College; but the reason for this, however, was not lack of interest or athletic ability, but lack of time, as he remained teaching while continuing his course at St. Dunstan's. Nevertheless, he was always a firm supporter of his Alma Mater.

We cannot presume to say what profession George will follow. Judging by his indomitable will, however, and by his energy displayed in college activities, he will surely meet with the success that has attended his early career, and will always reflect credit upon his Alma Mater.

—R. J. M., '26.

JOSEPH ALEXANDER McMILLAN

"His life is gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that Nature may stand up,
And say to all the world—This is a man."

Picturesquely situated on Hillsborough Bay, at a point where three beautiful streams mingle their waters with that of the harbor, stands the city of Charlottetown, from whence so many of Alma Mater's illustrious sons have come—not the least of whom is Joseph A. McMillan, the subject of this sketch.

Great was the jubilation, we are told, in the McMillan home, when on August 16, 1907, Joe, as he is familiarly known, sent forth his feeble cries to inform the world that here was no ordinary being come to act his part on the stage of mortals.

At an early age Joe entered Queen Square School and after a successful course clearly displayed his ability when in the spring of 1921 he passed the matriculation examinations, standing high in the list. Joe's eager desire for knowledge carried him further in its quest, and in the following autumn he entered St. Dunstan's where he not only made a brilliant course but also proved himself to be an ideal student, taking part in all the numerous activities of college life.

As an athlete he was at home on the diamond, the gridiron and the basketball floor. He was a member of the senior hockey team in 1923 and 1924, and, as captain in 1925, he contributed in no small measure by his playing to S. D. U. victories. 'Twas he who captained the senior Philosophers to victory over the juniors in that memorable clash on March 8th last, and later led the Waiters to victory over the famous Faculty team of 1926. As cheer leader, Joe was ever ready to cheer his comrades on to victory.

Joe is a debater of great ability. As Minister of Justice in the MacDonald administration he worked faithfully in the interests of his party and though frequently called upon to answer severe criticisms of his department he was ever equal to the task.

As a scholar, Joe did excellent work during the five years of his course, being a medalist in his third, fourth, fifth and sixth years, and passing his B.L. examinations in the spring of 1924.

As a fitting recognition of his ability and popularity his classmates honored him with the presidency of the class of 1926.

In no other line did Joe excel more than in his work as a member of the Red and White staff. The enviable position which our magazine holds in the college literary world is due, to a large extent, to Joe's work as Editor and Business Manager during the past two years.

So strongly was the social side of Joe's life developed that he found it hard to part for more than a few minutes at a time from his friends—a fact which often at unwarranted times carried him unconsciously into the neighboring rooms—even going so far, that, on two occasions, he found himself doing "time" for several days with his friends in the study hall.

Being a life-long friend of Mr. McMillan, we have ever known him to be a gentleman, and always working faithfully in the interests of Alma Mater. We know of no student who will be more missed from the daily routine of college life, as will Joe both by professors and students alike.

Concerning Joe's future we may only conjecture, but knowing him as we do, we cannot but feel, that in his life work will be present that same energy and vim so characteristic of his work at St. Dunstan's; and with this Joe's many friends reluctantly bid him, au revoir.

JOHN FREDERICK MONAGHAN

Sometime in the first decade of the twentieth century among the rolling uplands of Hazelbrook, this worthy member of this year's graduating class first drew breath. His early youth and boyhood were spent with nature in the smiling fields of his country home. But all the attractiveness of farm life was overcome by his longing for knowledge. It was at the small school of Mt. Herbert that Fred first learned the primary principles. In a few short years he had quaffed all the learning that could be had from that source of knowledge, and, being desirous of increasing his intellectual training, he enrolled as a student of St. Dunstan's in the autumn of 1920. Here he has since remained, and has now completed a most successful college career.

Fred, besides being a clever and industrious student, has taken an active part in all affairs connected with college life, and his broadmindedness gave an impetus to every organization with which he was concerned.

He is an athlete of no mean standing, and last fall had the great honor of being captain of the champion Intermural Football team. In fact it has been said of him that he never played a game that he did not win. Though he had not the physical ability to become a member of the senior team, yet his interest in college games was never lacking, and he was always present on the scene of combat, cheering lustily when St. Dunstan's went forth to do battle against a foe.

As a member of the St. Thomas Literary and Debating Society he has proved himself an able and keen debater, and in Mock Parliament his fluent oratory saved his party on many occasions.

His cordiality and amiable disposition have won for him the esteem of both the faculty and students. His intellectual genius soon became apparent after he entered college, and the spirit of industry with which he pursued his studies may best be seen when we consider that, though the youngest member of the graduating class, he stands high in his various classes. Nor was his education solely intellectual, for, following the example of his patron, St. Thomas, and, by strict observance of all the rules, he has engraved in his very nature those virtuous habits which are so indispensable in the make-up of a noble character.

We are not in possession of any facts as to what course in life he is going to follow, but, judging from his ability to study and from his sound reasoning qualities, we feel that no matter what it shall be, he will ever reflect credit on his Alma Mater.

St, CLAIR A. MONAGHAN

"When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory."

The subject of this sketch first saw the light of day in the Queen City and Capital of the Garden Province. He received his early education at Queen Square School in his native city; and, after drinking from these springs of knowledge, a worthy ambition to acquire a sound classical education led him to the portal of St. Dunstan's. Five years have slipped gracefully away; the euphonious "St Clair" has become the more familiar "Monty," and the slender boy has been transformed into a sample of glorious manhood.

There is nothing of the abnormal about "Monty." He is ever a jolly sport and a true friend. Each and every interest of the institution in which he has spent these five years has been dear to him and has received the best that was in him. On the campus, in the classroom, in debate, he has repeatedly shown his mettle; and these same qualities will unquestionably bring him the full measure of success when he enters the larger arena of business, professional, or public life.

CHARLES HAROLD MORRISSON

The sun shone brightly over the village of Savage Harbor, and all nature seemed decked in her most beautiful autumnal hues on September 16, 1904, that important day that ushered Charles Morrisson into the world. Of Charlie's boyhood years we know very little; they are shrouded in obscurity. We know, however that he was a regular attendant at the village school, where he imbibed his full share of the knowledge and wisdom dispensed there. But this was not sufficient to slake his thirst for knowledge, so we find him, in the autumn of 1919, a student at St. Dunstan's. That was seven years ago, and now he is one of those whom St. Dunstan's sends forth as her graduates.

Charles has always had a deep interest in all the activities relative to college life, and was ever ready to "help out" by every means in his power. In athletics he did not take an active part, but he was always there to cheer the wearers of the Red and White to victory. As a debater Charles showed himself a keen, ready-witted and fluent speaker, and by his forensic ability he oftentimes proved the fallacy of his opponents' arguments. Likewise, in Mock Parliament he distinguished himself by some brilliant speeches, which we hope will be preserved in Hansard for the benefit of posterity.

Charles has ever been an industrious student, a friend to everyone, and the record of his career at St. Dunstan's is one of which he may well be proud. Possessing these qualifications, we feel sure that, whatever vocation he chooses when he goes forth from his Alma Mater, he will make a success of it, and prove himself a worthy son of St. Dunstan's.

EDWARD JARVIS HODGSON MORRISSEY

"Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

To Georgetown goes the honor of being the birth-place of Hodgson Morrissey, and it was here, during the last days of the first decade of the twentieth century, that he, with many already famous graduates of St. Dunstan's received the first principles of education. Even at this early age Hodgson displayed that keenness of intellect, firmness of will and general good sportsmanship, which we, who have known him as a true friend, have so often marked in all his undertakings.

That he was a scholar of no common degree was evidenced by the fact that, in the spring of 1918 he passed from the walls of Prince of Wales College, armed with a first class diploma, going forth into the battle of life to do his part of the good to be done for humanity. After having taught school for four years, in and around his home town, he entered St. Dunstan's, and since then has always played the part of a true gentleman. During his few years stay with us at St. Dunstan's he was attached to the teaching staff of Queen Square School, Charlottetown, and his ability as a teacher, as well as his general popularity, is clearly demonstrated by the fact that this spring he was re-elected president of the Teacher's Federation of Prince Edward Island. In this enviable position he shows that he has that great faculty of directing and governing that characterizes the activities of famous men.

When we say good-by to Hodgson we feel that we lose a real friend. Those of us who knew him well always found him a generous and pleasant companion. Although his athletic activities were confined chiefly to football, having played on our intermediate team for two years, he was always a strong supporter of his Alma Mater, and counted no personal sacrifice too dear to uphold the traditions of old St. Dunstan's.

In bidding him adieu, we feel that his undaunted courage and true sense of justice, together with his pleasant personality and good sportsmanship, will ever guide him in his chosen state, and so we say—au revoir.

PHILIP MICHAEL ROONEY

Philip Michael Rooney was born on the 4th day of August, 1904, in the peaceful countryside of Iona.

Of his early life, our knowledge is rather limited, but, from fragments of conversation with him, we are led to believe that he obtained his elementary education at the schools of Fort Augustus, Charlottetown, Cardigan and Souris.

The first time we saw Michael was in the autumn of 1920, when he registered as a student of St. Dunstan's University.

During his college career "Mike" has not coveted the plaudits of the public, but has rather endeavoured to procure a general and efficient knowledge in all sciences which he considers will serve him best to combat the trials and vicissitudes of life. He possesses a congenial disposition, which is ever present in both bright and gloomy environments, and which has won for him the affection and goodwill of his classmates and fellow students. He has an artistic hand and fluent pen which, we hope, will some day elevate him to a position of no small importance.

In athletics we do not find Michael a frequenter of the gridiron to any great extent, but he plays his own part of the game well in baseball and hockey.

In bidding adieu to this member of the graduating class of '26, we feel assured that the perseverance and thrift which aided him under the guiding hand of Alma Mater will escort him onward to the field of his future activities.

JOHN HENRY SULLIVAN

The subject of our sketch was born in Boston early in January of the year 1905. This much we have gleaned by dint of great labor and much expense, but the only additional fact that we can discover about our hero down to 1914 is that he went to school. At least when he appears as an historical personage at Summerside in 1914 he already possessed a knowledge of the three R's.

At Summerside, John kept up his pursuit of learning, and in 1921 graduated from the High School, and the same autumn entered St. Dunstan's.

Our hero has been an exemplary student, brilliant, industrious and ambitious. He has ever stood at or near the top of his classes, adding yearly to his collection of medals. On the platform he was eloquent and logical, and so, thoroughly dreaded by his opponents. During the past two years John has been one of the Business Managers of the Red and White, and his unflagging zeal and faithful service have been of inestimable benefit in advancing the cause of our magazine.

By no means a heavyweight, John has contrived by dint of hard playing and good sportsmanship to make a name for himself on the athletic field. He was a fast and brilliant half on last year's intermediate team, which, although it did not carry off the championship, kept the issue in doubt until the last seconds of the game.

Our hero's future is shrouded from us, but we predict success for him in whatever sphere of activity he may choose for his life work, and he leaves St. Dunstan's with the hearty good wishes of his fellow students and his teachers.

CAMPBELL WURTELE

The only French-Canadian of the graduating class of '26, Campbell Wurtele, is a worthy representative of a race, the record of whose deeds has graced the annals of Canada with many a stirring tale of heroism. Born at Arthabaska, P. Q., on the 25th of March, 1906, Campbell passed the early years of his life at various towns of his native province. For two years he attended the Seminary of Three Rivers, and afterwards pursued his studies at the Seminary of Rimouski, where he was successful in passing the B. L., examinations. In the fall of 1924 he came to St. Dunstan's to follow the course in Philosophy and Science, and to make himself better acquainted with the English language. In both he has been eminently successful. In his junior year he won the medal for Philosophy, while, but for the accent of his mother tongue, he has fairly mastered the intricacies of English. His voice has been heard in the debating room and in the banquet hall, where the clear logic of his reasoning and the easy grace of his delivery have delighted all who heard him.

Campbell's talents are by no means confined to the realm of utility. He is an accomplished violinist whose fame has reached beyond the walls of St. Dunstan's, where he is always in demand whenever music is to be furnished. He is also a valued member of the College choir.

Often of an evening, when pipes are lit, and the cares of the day are dispersed in fragrant clouds of smoke, the lovers of music have been wont to gather in Campbell's room to enjoy the pleasure of his company, or to listen to the sweet strains of his violin. That this is so, notwithstanding danger of asphyxiation by the potent fumes of "le tabac naturel" which Campbell is continually puffing from the huge bowl of an ancient briar, speaks well of his popularity among the students.

A man of our hero's ability should go far in any walk of life, so we have no fear for his future success. As we bid him adieu we know that, while we are parting from a good friend, and St. Dunstan's is losing a good student, the world is gaining a man.
