Evening in Nature's Temple

Like minarets on some far eastern Mosque,
That flash and glisten in the sun's last light,
So stand the fir trees in the holy sunset hour.
Their cones—a hundred tiny spires,
Whose soft and ever changing hues
Gleam far adown the twilight shadows.

A moment and the sunset fire is gone ;
The purple dusk comes dropping down the hills,
And darkness fills the silent cloister of the woods.

The last sweet bird song dies away,
An Angelus divine in praise,
Nature, in peace, is bowed in silent prayer.
