

College Chronicle

The time has come when the trees preparing for winter, dismantle themselves of their coat of colored grandeur and the wheat fields, once a play-ground for the wind, now boldly show off their golden crew cuts above the ground, knowing that the winds can't do them any harm, but wait patiently to give the new snow a soft bed on which to rest its head.

But someone else waits. Yes, Red and White waits for the Chronicle Editor to record in print some of the recent activities and information which might be of interest to you, our readers.
