

EXCHANGES

We regret to state that a number of our latest exchanges are not at hand. This is due to the fact that several of them did not reach us till after St. Dunstan's had closed last spring. However with next issue we hope to have as many magazines to review as formerly.

"Loyola Review"

We heartily congratulate the staff of this magazine upon their June issue. The Honor Roll is very creditable and the photographs of the fallen heroes who were formerly students at Loyola are very artistically arranged. The articles, "Was Newman Successful?" and "The College and the Battlefield" are certainly a credit to the magazine. However now that the war is over and many of the students who were enrolled under the Union Jack will be returning to college we hope to see more of the matter contributed by the students themselves.

"Prospector"

The Nov. number of this magazine contains much which can be read with profit and enjoyment. The poetry which is all contributed by the students of the college is not the usual "hit and miss" prosaic verse which is usually found in college magazines, but on the other hand gives evidence of talent by no means undeveloped. The articles on various subjects are all good but "College Education" deserves special mention. The students of Mt. St. Charles College are to be congratulated upon overcoming their many difficulties in publishing such an interesting magazine.

"St. Joseph Lilies"

The September number of this magazine reached us but a short time before we go to press and, consequently, we have not been able to read the different articles as thoroughly as we would wish. Reverend Dr. Dollard's review on "Singing Fires of Erin" is an excellent criticism on Elenor Fodgers Cox's latest collection of poems. The Rev. critic certainly speaks the truth when he says: "The man of Irish blood who can read these poems unmoved and unthrilled is truly recreant to his name and race". The article "Structure of Dante's Inferno" which is continued from the April issue gives a very thorough explanation of the regions visited by the Immoral Poet in his "Divina Comedia". To show our appreciation of this number of St. Joseph Lilies it is only necessary to say that it is up to its usual high standard.

"Acadia Athenaeum"

A short story entitled "The Traitor" in the November number of this magazine pays a very high and well merited tribute to the patriotism of the sons of "la belle France". The poem "To Acadia" written by one of the students is very creditable and we hope to see more poetry from his pen in future numbers.

"Xaverian"

We welcome this magazine back upon our shelf again after an absence of one year. Now that the war is over and as a consequence St. Francis Xavier College will welcome many of her former students back to their Alma Mater we expect that the next number of the "Xaverian" will have more of its old time vigor.

We acknowledge with thanks the following exchanges; Loyola Review, Georgetown College Journal, University Monthly, Prospector, St. Joseph Lilies, Acadia Athenaeum, King's College Record, and Dalhousie Gazette.

At Christmas play, and make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year.
